Do you have any comments or suggestions to make?

Personally I think that it was interesting to experience a new format of a course.

Nevertheless I really disliked the 10 rich posts in the forum, since for me it felt a lot like forced discussions rather than actual interest. I really liked the oral presentations because you can practice speaking in front of people and I really liked that we could choose our own topics. I still haven't understood the whole bonus point-system. It feels like you have to get bonus points to achieve a really good grade (like an A/B) which means that bonus points aren't bonus points anymore...? I'd also prefer a written seminar paper to the quizzes but I guess that's just personal preference. Overall I liked the lessons a lot because we got to talk and listen to new researches. Also you seemed like a really laid back professor who does require his students to work for their grades but who doesn't put too much pressure on them. It would be good to see the corrected quiz to learn something. Maybe it could be shown to the students in the course, so we can't 'screenshot' it. I feel a little overstrained with the rich postings, particularly if you don't feel very comfortable writing something (about a not very uncomplicated topic) in English. For 1 (in my opinion) 'good' post I needed 1-2 hours, which I think is too long.

Overall, I think the course was a bit too difficult for me in order to take a lot out of it. Even though participation was possible, the presentations interesting and the prof very helpful and encouraging, I found it difficult to follow. It took me many hours to read the chapters and still the online tests were very difficult. However, there are other ways to make up for this deficit and that I think is fair. In the end though, I have to say that I did not get out as much as I could have with the time I put into the course.

I'd rather have more weight to the oral participation than to the rich posts, even though I know, that that's probably more difficult to handle. It would be good, if we would know the names of every person much better, so that we could have a more personal feeling and could probably also discuss better. All in all it was a very good course though with a very very good teacher. All the people I talked to were having the same feelings about that.

I really liked to idea of the rich posts, because it motivated me to think more about things and I it motivated me to question things and to start asking questions like why is that happening and so on...I think I became more curious. But sometimes the answers of the students werent satisfying enough. Then I would have like to get an "expert answer of the professor" or something like " If you are more interested in that kind of stuff I can recommend this researcher or have a look in that journal" .
